

The NDIA is working toward breaking down barriers and enabling people with disabilities to choose where and with whom they live.

Housing and living arrangements can influence our quality of life and can be influenced by:

- how close we want to live to friends and family
- where our children can go to school
- whether we can find work or transport options nearby
- the type of community we want to live in, and
- whether we can access public spaces, activities and services.

A well-designed house in the right location can allow for more independent living arrangements, increased community connection and access to informal supports.

The NDIS provide a range of home and living support services:

Specialist Disability Accommodation

Supported Independent Living

Individualised Living Options

Providing assistive technology

Providing home modifications

Housing information

Helping participants transition from residential aged care

Home and living compliance

This page current as of
31 January 2023

The NDIA is working toward breaking down barriers and enabling people with disabilities to choose where and with whom they live.

Housing and living arrangements can influence our quality of life and can be influenced by:

- how close we want to live to friends and family
- where our children can go to school
- whether we can find work or transport options nearby
- the type of community we want to live in, and
- whether we can access public spaces, activities and services.

A well-designed house in the right location can allow for more independent living arrangements, increased community connection and access to informal supports.

The NDIS provide a range of home and living support services:

Specialist Disability Accommodation

Supported Independent Living

Individualised Living Options

Providing assistive technology

Providing home modifications

Housing information

Helping participants transition from residential aged care

Home and living compliance

This page current as of
31 January 2023