What's the benefit of being a graduate in the APS?

Build your skills. Build your career. Shape Australia's future.

As a graduate in the APS you'll do meaningful work from day one and see the impact you make in the community we serve.

We'll ask you to contribute to work that matters and encourage your ideas.

Why the NDIA?

We're different to other APS agencies. The NDIA is continually evolving, with the NDIS now supporting more than 646,000 Australians living with disability.

This means that our work and our teams also continue to expand, and we have a wide range of roles open across different functions in various locations.

The NDIA is making improvements. We continue to make changes in our processes to better support people with disability.

This means we need people with fresh ideas and enthusiasm to work towards our commitment. You will get the opportunity and platform to flex your creativity and make positive changes.

Your work has impact. Everything we do works towards a stronger NDIS.

What are we looking for in our graduates?

We're looking for graduates who are passionate and committed to the NDIA's purpose. People who enjoy working as part of a diverse, high-performing team.

We want our staff to reflect the community we serve. We value diversity in every respect.

We welcome applications from graduates with diverse academic skills, including, but not limited to:

- human resources
- data and analytics
- legal
- media and communications
- economics, accounting and finance
- business and commerce
- ICT, computer science, project and program management
- cyber security

- software development
- risk
- social sciences (policy, research, health, disability)
- behavioural science and psychology
- allied health
- government or public policy and political science
- engineering

We also encourage people with disability, who come from a culturally and linguistically diverse background or who identify as Aboriginal or Torres Strait Islander, to apply.

To find out what it's like to be a graduate with the NDIA, see our Meet our Graduates page.
