

On this page:

Who is likely to need a full plan reassessment?

Who is likely to be able to continue with the same supports in a new plan?

For children younger than 7

Who is likely to need a full plan reassessment?

If your circumstances have changed significantly, you will need to have a full plan reassessment. For example:

- If the impact of your disability on your life has changed
- If you have started a new life stage such as school or work
- There is a significant change in your personal circumstances and/or living arrangements
- Children younger than 7 with changing goals and developmental needs whose support needs have changed

Who is likely to be able to continue with the same supports in a new plan?

If the impact of your disability on your life hasn't changed.

If you don't expect any big life changes in the next 12 months, like starting study, work or starting school.

If you have been using your current plan and it is working for you, helping you pursue your goals and the supports continue to be reasonable and necessary.

For children younger than 7

The aim of early intervention is to provide support as early as possible to reduce the impact of a child's disability or developmental delay on their daily life.

If your child receives early childhood intervention supports, their early childhood partner will usually do their review.

When your child's plan is nearing its review date, we will call you to check-in with you and see how they are going, and book a plan review meeting.

For children younger than 7, a full plan reassessment is usually recommended every 12-24 months. It is important to take into account any upcoming transitions, milestones or changes in your child's goals and support needs, such as starting school.

Because of this, we will not be able to develop a new plan with the same supports as your child's current plan without a plan reassessment meeting and a clear understanding of your child's current needs.

If there is evidence that only minor changes to your child's plan and previous level of funding are needed, your child may receive a new plan with those changes. Sometimes, we can do a plan for up to 24 months, where support needs are likely to remain stable. For further information go to Our guidelines – creating your plan.

The decision for the new plan will be made by the NDIA based on the reasonable and necessary criteria.

We will work with you during your child's plan reassessment meeting to understand what the best approach is to help your child work towards their goals.

We encourage you to discuss early childhood provider reports with your early childhood intervention providers a few months ahead of your child's plan reassessment.

The NDIS requires providers working with children younger than 7 who are NDIS participants, to report on the services and supports they provide to you and your child at least annually. Early childhood provider reports help us better understand the progress you and your child have made towards your goals, outcomes achieved and future recommendations.

You can read more about early childhood provider reports on the information for families and carers page.

This page current as of 14 September 2022