Posted on:
3 February 2025

As a proud First Nations woman, Tammy feels supported at work as a leader and advocate for her community.

For more than 7 years Tammy has worked at the National Disability Insurance Agency (NDIA), the government agency delivering the National Disability Insurance Scheme (NDIS) to people with disability.

‘I feel empowered to take on challenging roles with resilience, to not be afraid of having a voice both as a woman in leadership, and a First Nations woman,’ she said.
Tammy, who comes from the Kalkadoon, Ku Ku Yalanji and Nyamal tribes, is happiest when mentoring others.

‘I love being a mentor and guiding people as they navigate any personal and professional conflicts,’ said Tammy.

Tammy, whose family comes from 3 different stolen generations, said the NDIA’s First Nations Employee Network (FNEN) and First Nations Employment and Inclusion Plan (FNEIP) are positive steps.

‘There is a lot of mistrust within government and our culture. Working for the Australian Public Service does not always mix well for First Nations employees.

‘Having supports and opportunities for First Nations people within the NDIA, facilitates growth; professionally, individually, and as a workplace on a whole,’ said Tammy.

For Tammy, it’s important to see the NDIA is recognising the intricacies of being a First Nations employee, a woman, and a leader.

‘Working for NDIA is rewarding as I get to make a difference in the lives of others,’ said Tammy.

Related Stories and videos

New Norfolk NDIS participant Kerry Kievit is still doing what she loves best, volunteering to help others in her community and spending quality time with her family.

Kerry’s NDIS supports help her stay active in her community

23 May 2024
In the months ahead, Donna will navigate uncertain path with her guide dog Dora

Donna brings lived experience and passion for inclusive communities to Participant Advocate role

3 December 2021
This performer and tech-user shows what can be achieved in an accessible world

Grace puts assistive technologies to work, and connects with her theatre community

10 May 2024
More stories and videos