

Posted on:
14 May 2021

For Michel Tuomy, the hardest thing about his schizophrenia diagnosis was accepting it.

The 50-year-old Lower Templestowe local was diagnosed with the illness in his early 30s, but it wasn't until around 15 years later that he started to come to terms with it.

It was a lifelong love of arts that inspired Michel to start writing again, helping him on a journey to recovery.

"I have a friend who is a retired doctor, and he always says the hardest thing about schizophrenia is having the person accept they have it," Michel said.

"It's made me realise that the doctors, nurses and other health professionals are there to support me, and the only walls that exist are the walls that I put up myself."

After accessing funding through the NDIS in 2018, Michel engaged an arts mentor, who assists him with creative practice and the business side of his work.

His mentor Tania supports him with applying for grants for his theatre plays, promotions and publicity for his work and supporting him to engage with his community.

"It makes my week so much more fulfilled because I walk away from my meetings with Tania with an objective and it motivates me, we would never have been awarded a grant for the play if I didn't have Tania to help me write it.

"It gives me a routine every day, which is something I can put down to the NDIS."

Michel's play Little Brother, Big Sister was postponed for a year due to COVID-19. But, he can see the silver lining.

"The delay also got me working on other writing projects. I have taken a fellowship with Manningham Council to develop another play whose main characters have disabilities."

Little Brother, Big Sister is now due to play at Melbourne's La Mama Courthouse this May with sessions selling out fast.

"I feel like everyone is a lot more excited for the play. It's been a year waiting – the play has been maturing like a red wine."

The play tells the story of a man with schizophrenia and his sister who acts as his carer, mirroring the relationship of Michel and his own sister Fiona.

"It's a story of battling with the illness and not accepting it, but then coming to a point where you do accept it."

World Schizophrenia Week runs from 23-29 May this year, and the theme for 2021 is 'Discover Better Mental Health'. The week aims to raise awareness of schizophrenia, promote inclusion and give a voice to people with lived experience.

Michel says that inclusion and acceptance are the key messages he is promoting through his play.

"It's all about public perception versus reality, yes people with schizophrenia have delusions and fantasies, but with the right support, and through programs like the NDIS, you can get a helping hand and contribute to society.

"That's what I want to portray with the play, the real face of schizophrenia."

Related Stories and videos

Michel's play - a story of inclusion and acceptance

A lifelong love of the arts inspires Michel's journey

13 May 2020

Ade Djajamihardja's story

Gratitude the key to filmmaker's stroke recovery

3 September 2018

Ms Ryan is passionate about people with disability being seen on stage and valued for their talents

Award-winning dancer Michelle Ryan back at WOMADelaide, with support from NDIS

8 March 2022

More stories and videos